More snow for March

9 March 2006

Forecasters at the Met Office are predicting that some areas of the UK could see the return of wintry conditions over the weekend.

Parts of north and east Scotland, northern England, the Midlands and East Anglia could see wintry weather, including snow, during Saturday, with snow continuing on Sunday in northernmost regions.

Chief Forecaster at the Met Office, Doug Mansfield said: "At this stage it looks like higher ground in particular could see several centimetres of snow by Sunday morning, although it remains uncertain just how much there will be. Icy conditions could also be a problem."

The Met Office is working with other organisations such as the Highways Agency to alert people to the risk and the best advice is to check the latest weather and travel reports over the coming days.
